SUGGESTIONS FOR TABLE AND KITCHEN.

"A partridge properly reasted is a dish fit for beings better than men."

Duting the fail and winter our city markets are well supplied with all kinds of game. Until the cold weather fairly sets and about the lakes. Praits he heas and partriages become quite tame during the long winter and are frequently to be found near farmhouses, where they come in search of food. The winter wind fowl, fattened on the wheat, are better than those killed in the fail.

Game and wild fowl furnish a pleasant change in the men diet. Observe how nature carefully regulates the supply of the heavier, nitrosenous form of food embraced in meal list. As the warm weather advances and during the heated season, we lose our relish for strong meats, such as beef, mutton, etc., and then comes the abundant supply of fish from river, lake and ocean, and as the cooler weather advances the wild game and poultry supply the demand of an increasing appetite for heater viands, and yet a more easily digested meat than butcher's meat.

One of the chief characteristics of game is the absence of fat permenting the muscular fibers. The meat is also short fibered. These two features make the meat very digestible and particularly valuable for invalids. When poultry or game is well fattened the meat does not possess the same delicate fiavor, and when roasted the fat makes them far less digestible.

The high authorities on cooking of game tell us that we must abstain from the use of too much seasoning and to avoid all spley herbs—onions, garlie or shallots—as these destroy the delicate intrinsic value of the game. While the freshly killed birds that feed on vegetable products do not, as a rule, have a strong havor, the meat is considered much improved by hanging until the bounds and the father hand to some extent decomposed. The fishy flavor noticeable often in wild fowl can be removed by irst boiling them in water with onions and sait.

The meat of the native hare is similar in texture and composition to the majority of game birds, while the rabbit correspo

Shattered When Expert Tried to Open Strong Box.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 29.-News reached here to-day of a singular bank-safe explosion at Jonesboro, Tenn., where a gang el robbers made a desperate effort a few days ago to loot the First National Bank. In their efforts to blow the safe the robbers used nitroglycerin. The first charge falled to demotish the safe door, but injured the combination. They were frightened off.

The services of Harry Knight, a safe expert from Cincinnati, were secured to assist the bank officials in opening the safe. This morning while standing upon the vault tapping the doors there was a terrific explosion that wrecked the entire office and shattered windows in the vicinity of the bank. Pieces of twisted steel were turn from the safe doors and hunled violently across the room. One piece demolished a desk and office chair, passing within a foot of Cashler Charles McPherson's head, finally crashing through a dec.

The hammer in the hands of Expert Knight was torn from the handle and sent flying through the plate-glass window. About ten persons were in the bank at the time and miraculously escaped serious in-jury. The burglars had left the safe loaded with nitroglyceria and the vault, as well as the bank, was wrecked by the explosion. One of the safe blowers, Ed Witson, in jail at Jonesboro, anxiously inquired about the progress being made toward opening the safe, seeming to leave the impression that something was going to happen.

SCRAMBLING FOR BIG ARMY PLUMS.

Five Generals Seeking Seniority Under Provisions of the Proposed Law.

FIRST NAMED SUCCEEDS MILES.

Wade, Merriam, Young, MacArthur and Ludlow Hold the Same Rank-Lee May Be Retired on Full Pay.

REPUBLIC STECIAL Washington, Nov. 29.-Already plans for the reorganization of the army in accordance with the bill pending before the Hous: Military Committee are in course of formulation at the War Department,

Army circles are particularly interested in the method to be adopted in distributing general commissions. A scramble for the places has begun. The law provides that the senior Major General shall be the Commanding General of the army, with the rack of Lieutenant General, so that there will be a total of eight Major Generals in the reorganized army.

General Miles will continue to serve as the commanding officer until August 8, 1903, when he will retire on account of age. Before General Miles's retirement Major General E. S. Otis and Major General J. R. Brooke will be relegated to the ratired

Wade May Succeed Miles. The appointments to be made to the grade of Major General by the President after the passage of the reorganization bill will consequently be of the greatest im-portance to the service. The first officer named will become the successor of Lieu-tenant General Miles, and friends of aspirants for this honor are already at work to secure it.

The senior Brigadier General of the reg-ular service is James F. Wade, and holding the same rank are Henry C. Merriam, S. B. M. Young, General MacArthur and W. A. Ludiow. As the army is now constituted there is a vacancy in the grade of Briga-dier General, and it is to be given to Major General Leonard Wood of volunteers, Govrnor of Cuba.

An official to-day said postively that, ex-cept officers of junior rank, no volunteers will be given commissions in the reorgan-ized army. This means that regular officers only will be made Major Generals and Brigadier Generals. It is considered highly probable that the President will determine to promote four of the Brigadier General to be Major Generals in the establishment. These four may be Generals Wade, who will thus become the Lieutenant Genera will thus become the Lieutenant denotate Commanding and hold the position for four years; H. C. Merriam, who will retire in Nevember next; S. B. M. Young, who will retire in 1991, and General MacArthur, who will reilire in 1909.

The President is anxious to reward Generals J. P. Bates and Adna R. Chaffee, and they may also be made Major Generals. Wants to Reward Lee.

If the President adopts the plan practically determined upon, Brigadier Generals of Volunteers James M. Wilson, Fitzhugh Lee, Frederick D. Grant, James F. Smith and rederick Funston will be honorably disharged from the army before July 1 next. The President is anxious to get legislation which will permit him to retire Generals Wilson and Lee with their present rank. Simmons said he was holding the papers for a reward of $25, which Tourville had promised.

November 21, 1909, Mrs. Ellen Cole of No 4123 Maryland avenue left the deeds of trust with Tourville for his acknowledgment. He lost them on the street. Simmons found them and the next day read in The Republic an advertisement offering a reward for the return of the property to Tourville. Simmons wrote an unsigned note to the notary asking him to announce in the columns of The Republic the amount of reward he would pay for the papers. Tourville inserted an advertisement offering to pay the finder $25. When Simmons took the deeds to Tourville's office, he declares, the notary refused to pay him the reward. Simmons then refused to de-liver the deeds. Tourville notified Chief Desmond, and Detectives Shevlin and Williams, on orders, brought Simmons to the Four Courts, where he returned the deeds Skirt, 12, 14 and 16 years.

The shoulders are strapped with stitched bands, which extend out over the sleeves and the neck is completed with a smart, high-band, turn-down collar.

The bell sleeves are shaped with inside seam only, and have slight fullness at the shoulders. They flare widely over the full undersleeve, which is confined at the wrist on a narrow band.

The blouse may be lined if preferred.

The skirt is made with seven comparatively narrow gores, fitting smoothly around the walst and over the hips. The seams are opened, thoroughly pressed and machine-stitched. Extensions added on each side of the gores, from the point where the stitching ends, are arranged in hollow box plaits and flatly pressed. The fullness thus added gives a graceful flare to the skirt around the lower edge.

There is an inverted plait at each side of the center back, where the closing is made invisibly.

The costume is finished with machine-stitching in strictly tailor style. Covert, cheviot, zibeline, broad or ladies' cloth are appropriate for this mode. The collar, straps and laps on the pockets may be made of velvet, if preferred, and the inside of the box platts on the skirt covered with velvet, which will show when the wearer walks.
